

Invitation

International Conference Building Bridges for the Next Generations

May 16-17, 2023

Dresden, International Congress Center

As a neutral mediator, science has always been able to build bridges and cross borders – whether they are geographical, disciplinary or societal. In times like these, it is more important than ever to strengthen already existing connections among international partners in Central Europe and to build new alliances among the younger generations. That is why the Free State of Saxony initiated the international science conference Building Bridges for the Next Generations, which will be organized by the Helmholtz-Zentrum Dresden-Rossendorf (HZDR).

This May, scientists from Germany, Poland and the Czech Republic will come together and discuss how to solve urgent research questions especially in the areas of Health, IT and Energy & Climate. They will have the opportunity to exchange ideas with international experts from public offices as well as partners from the industry and start-up scene.

To show their support for this important matter, Michael Kretschmer, Minister-President of Saxony, and Petr Fiala, Prime Minister of the Czech Republic, have confirmed their participation.

For the program please visit our website:

<https://building-bridges-conference.eu/>

The HZDR cordially invites you to participate in this dialogue!

Please register here:

<https://con-gressa.de/form/registration-building-bridges/>

Please note: For participants from outside of Dresden, accommodation expenses (one night) will be covered by the host.

This measure is co-financed by tax funds based on budget passed by the Saxon State Parliament